Happy New Year and welcome to the first ebuletin of 2016!

Exhibition Capturing the City: Photography at the Bank of England

From 18 January

Viewed from outside, the Bank of England can appear as a formal establishment. But beyond the beautifully austere stone walls of the Bank's building on Threadneedle Street lies a hive of activity incorporating a remarkable architectural history representing the dynamism of the institution, a diverse range of occupations and a vibrant social history. These themes are intrinsically linked, working in harmony with the values the Bank holds dear.

This exhibition showcases the Bank's photography collection providing a fascinating record of the Bank, its buildings and staff since the Victorian era, featuring images of the Bank not generally accessible to the public as well as artworks and artefacts not usually on display. In partnership with the Bank of England Archive, this exhibition takes a look into the Bank's past, and explores the history of a medium that has come to dominate the world around us.

There are 50 places available for this special preview allocated on a first come first serve basis. If you would like to attend please RSVP to Claire.dumontier-marriage@cityoflondon.gov.uk by Friday 15 January (RSVP is essential).

For those who are unable to attend this preview the Museum is open Monday to Friday from 10am – 5pm. The exhibition will be running until the end of the year.

Monday – Friday 10am – 5pm
(last entry 4.45pm)

January Events in the City

January – July

Shakespeare Woz Ere

Make the most of a wonderful and varied programme of events in the City of London and Bankside, to mark the 400th anniversary of Shakespeare's death.

The subject hardly needs an introduction – Shakespeare's drama, poetry and language have resonated down the centuries and still inspire us today. Where better to celebrate his life than here, where he lived and worked, where you can still walk down streets which he passed along himself?

Through music, theatre, walks, talks, exhibitions and special events across Guildhall Galleries, Barbican, Shakespeare's Globe, Museum of London, and many other heritage settings, you can immerse yourself in a Shakespeare-fest with leading actors and musicians of today.

Whatever your choice, you're sure to find something to draw you in and reflect on a man whose words can still take us to the heart of the human experience.
